Battle breaks out over Wisconsin bill to keep boys out of girls restrooms: We Need to Take Action!

MADISON, Wisconsin, November 23, 2015 (LifeSiteNews) – A bill to stop transgender students from using restrooms and other facilities of the opposite sex faced a contentious, hours-long hearing.

But a spokesperson for the bill's sponsor in the state Senate says it is designed to protect children, and that the bill accounts for the struggles of transgender teenagers. And a state activist told LifeSiteNews that "this bill is a reasonable response to a complex problem."

"It's clearly not an easy issue for public schools to deal with," said Julaine Appling of Wisconsin Family Action. "But to not address it means violating the privacy rights of students. All students have a right to privacy. Allowing biologic boys to use the girls' restroom and locker room and vice versa violates that right."

In his testimony at the hearing, bill sponsor Steve Nass described Assembly Bill 469 as "a simple proposal with common sense provisions that establish a statewide standard to balance the interests of a diverse population of students and parents."

The bill recognizes the sex of each student per what the child's stated anatomy is at birth, on a birth certificate, and "Insures that the privacy interests of students in all corners of the state are treated equally by prohibiting females from using changing rooms designated for males and males from using the changing rooms of females," said Nass.

If a student "identifies as a member of the opposite sex" and a parent makes a request to use a different restroom or changing room, the bill "protects the ability of parents and students to seek reasonable accommodations from school boards for the use of single occupancy changing rooms by a student[.]"

Please contact our local state representatives and senator & urge them to support Assembly Bill 469, and make sure to ask them what their position is on this most important issue!

Archbishop Chaput: European churches that give Communion to 'remarried' are violating Catholic teaching

PHILADELPHIA, November 20, 2015 (LifeSiteNews) -- Philadelphia Archbishop Charles Chaput has definitively called out his brother bishops in Europe who have allowed Communion for remarried divorcees, saying they have "departed from authentic Catholic teaching."

His remarks come in a lengthy essay on mercy published in the December issue of First Things. The Church, he says, "cannot be merciful without being truthful," and a pastoral approach which ignores that we are called to conversion, "out of a thinly veiled pastoral despair and accommodationism will result in less faith, not more."

Indeed, continues Chaput, "this is what we see happening in Europe, in those churches where the pastoral practice regarding divorce, remarriage, and reception of the sacraments has departed from authentic Catholic teaching." He warns that what comes from such "an untruthful teaching about and practice of the sacraments is not a more zealous evangelical life but its collapse."

The Philadelphia archbishop says it is false to regard 'accompaniment' as 'thou shalt not judge,' since "affirming people indiscriminately as they are" is not mercy at all.

"We should not read Christ's mercy as a judgment against all judgments," he wrote. "Evil exists. Sin matters. The damage it does can be bitter and not easily undone—adultery being a perfect example."

Chaput suggests it is "misguided" to think of mercy as opposed to righteous judgment. He speaks of the temptation "to use the language of mercy to dodge our responsibility to seek justice."

"We lie or dissemble rather than bruise the feelings of others whose behaviors are clearly wrong. This is a polite form of cowardice, not mercy. The moral law guides us toward choices that are life-giving, and true mercy is always intimately linked to truth. Indulging our own or another's flawed choices in the supposed service of mercy defeats mercy's true goal."

"Confession and genuine repentance—which includes a turning away from sin," he says, is a "condition for receiving the Eucharist."

The St Vincent De Paul food pantry has moved from the St Casimir's location to the St James parish hall, 5804 Sheridan Rd. Please call 358-1275 on Tuesday mornings between 9:00 am and 10:00 am to sign up. Please keep this in mind for future reference.
