ISIS Destroys St. Elijah Monastery—Oldest Monastery in Iraq

Salute...Spring/Easter 2016

St. Elijah Monastery rested like a fortress on a hill over Mosul, across the Tigris River from the Old Testament site of Nineveh, and Father Whorton, along with fellow military chaplains and their assistants, guided many deployed Americans and others on tours of the 1400 year old Abbey.

In January, 2016, the Associated Press (AP) broke the tragic news that satellite images had confirmed destruction of St. Elijah at the hands of the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS). The shattering took place sometime between 27 August and 28 September 2014.

As it turns out, Father Whorton, and Father Patrick Van Durme, CH (CAPT), USA, both serving from the Archdiocese for the Military Services, USA (AMS), were the last priests to preside at the liturgy in the ancient monastery.

ISIS left almost no stone unturned. Mr. Stephen Wood, Chief Executive Officer of Longmont, Colorado-based Allsource Analysis, told the AP that the monastery's stone and mortar walls were "literally pulverized." He said that "bulldozers, heavy equipment, sledgehammers, possibly explosives turned those stone walls into this field of gray-white dust. They destroyed it completely."

"It was a sacred place," Father Whorton says of the 27,000-square foot, 26-room monastery, built in the late sixth century and named for a devout Assyrian Christian monk. In 1743, according to the AP, as many as 150 monks were martyred there on orders of a Persian general when they refused to convert to Islam. Celebrating Mass on the monastery's old altar, Father Whorton says, was "wonderful in a mystical and powerful way."

Now rubble, St. Elijah is still a holy site to Iraq's war-weary Christians, whose population has dwindled from 1.3 million to 300,000 since the 2003 U.S. allied invasion in Operation Enduring Freedom.

After learning that ISIS finally obliterated what was left, Father Whorton, now stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C., told the Great Britain's national daily, The Guardian, "Why we treat each other like this is beyond me. Elijah the prophet must be weeping."
